

Benefit Guild

Laurel Manor chapter bonded through the process.

"We have a good chapter that is willing to come together and help," Werginz said. "We like to go out for lunch, and sometimes we sew a little. That's kind of our joke."

Werginz manned the money table with Burner on Saturday. She said her quilting chapter has helped her in the past by making pillowcases for her daughter when she served in the military in Afghanistan. The chapter, which Burner calls the sisterhood of the traveling fabrics, was happy to help make the 68 pillowcases.

"It's more like a family," Burner said.

Wnuk said that though they've sold tons, there will still be fabric available on the final day of the sale today. It will continue from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at 3176 Abana Path in the Village of Fernandina. It's a private residence, so she encouraged carpooling. Only cash payments are accepted.

"Don't forget your cookie," Wnuk reminded shoppers as they exited with their bags of goods. She'd made them from scratch.

THE VILLAGES

Shirley Genova-Johnson took home a piece of Kenny G.

During his concert Saturday night at the Sharon L. Morse Performing Arts Center, the soprano saxophonist held a drawing for one of his instruments.

Genova-Johnson, who had the winning ticket, and her neighbor, Barb Matthias, went on stage and sat while Kenny G serenaded them.

"He was so gracious and so pleasant to be around," said Genova-Johnson, of the Village of Polo Ridge. "I might hang (the saxophone) on my wall."

In between, Kenny G performed some of his biggest instrumental hits, as well as the Stan Getz bossa nova classic "Desafinado" and his version of Celine Dion's "My Heart Will Go On."

At the start of the concert, Kenny G was playing out amongst the audience. He stood on top of an equipment case, right near 12-year-old Ryan Primc and his parents Holly and Randy Primc. Kenny G even high-fived Ryan.

"I think it was the best," Ryan said. "It's probably the best experience ever."

His grandparents Ron and Sally Primc, who live in The Villages, bought the tickets and let Ryan, Holly and Randy enjoy the show.

Ryan, who lives in Sanford, started playing the saxophone in the sixth grade and has looked to Kenny G as a musical hero. He hopes to follow in his musical footsteps.

"I like his fast fingers," Ryan said.
