'Dateline' Reporter Says His Interviews Can Be Therapeutic

Keith Morrison, the "Dateline" correspondent, has spoken to countless murder suspects and grieving family members over the years. But he says he truthfully never had an appetite for covering crime. Morrison, who says he fell into television after working in radio because he was "pretty much a screw-up at everything else," discovered over time that it could actually be therapeutic for the victims' families to speak with him. — The Associated Press become more and more energized as the show went on, cheering, standing up and singing along. "We love you," one fan called out. "Thank you very much, I love you, too," Thomas said. While there was plenty of applause, there was also a lot of laughter thanks to Thomas' comical stage presence. "Thank you, thank you very much," he said as the applause for "Hooked on a Feeling" died down. "I'll tell you what, that did sound pretty good." When asked why she came to the show, Village of Fernandina resident Sandy Hawley's immediate response was, "Raindrops Keep Falling on My Head," which was made popular by the movie "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid." "I know all the words," Hawley said. Hawley and her husband, Chuck, saw Thomas live during a free park concert years ago. "It's not heavy metal, it's easy listening, and they're catchy tunes," Chuck said.
