showcasing incredible singers. I find that if I do my songs and do them well with great singers, people are transported back to that time. It's an artist's dream to be able to sit in one place for more than a night. It's just great to be able to be there for a few days and enjoy the culture.

What do you hope people get out of your performances?

I always hope that they feel like they've seen something that they could've never seen anywhere else. It's basically a 40-year span of my career. It's just fun. An inclusive night is goal.

A lot of people in The Villages are fans of tenor Fernando Varela, and you work closely with him. Tell us about your relationship.

Fernando is from that area. He's an amazing singer and I've pushed his boundaries. He's a powerhouse and people love him. We toured together for the first time back in 2010 and just became fast friends. I love his talent and his energy. He also has a music-promoting business going. I just feel so lucky every time he's available to come and sing with me. I think people will enjoy the two of us together. The show is a big bang for your buck.

What is your favorite thing about what you do?

For so many years I made music as a behind-the-scenes person and didn't really know who I was reaching. To get out there and hear the whole audience singing the lines to my songs is just a great feeling to know that in your little room you were creating music that was reaching people all over the world. I don't really know where my fingers are when the piano starts. I'm so connected to the music. After making music in the studio for 40-plus years, now my favorite thing to do is to tour and to be on stage and get that immediate feedback.
