The crowd turned up to view a genuine ray of sunshine backstage and a thunderous beat that never seemed to end.

The legendary KC and the Sunshine Band brought a taste of the "70s to the Sharon L. Morse Performing Arts Center on Thursday night, and the crowd was in for a fun, upbeat night.

The band was formed in the 1970s and was one of the most popular groups of the era. The lineup included Harry Wayne Casey, known as lead singer KC, and band members who were known for their unique and catchy songs.

"Worldwide," known for their hit songs like "Shake Your Booty" and "That's the Way (I Like It)," performed a set that included their biggest hits.

The show began with a warm introduction from the band members, who greeted the audience with smiles and high-fives.

"It's so great to be back in the area," Casey said as he took the stage. "We've been away for too long, but we're ready to rock and roll!"

The band's signature sound was on full display as they played hit after hit, including their iconic song "Shake Your Booty." The audience couldn't help but sing along with every word.

KC and the Sunshine Band's energy was infectious, and the crowd responded in kind. They danced, sang, and clapped along to every song.

Casey, who is now in his 70s, proved he still has the moves as he performed his signature dance moves on stage.

"I've been on tour for so long," Casey joked, "but I'm still got it!"

The show ended with an encore performance of "That's the Way (I Like It)," which had the audience on their feet, cheering and dancing. The band took a well-deserved bow as the crowd erupted in cheers.

KC and the Sunshine Band's performance at The Sharon L. Morse Performing Arts Center was a hit, and the audience was left wanting more.

The band's music is timeless, and their performance was a reminder that sometimes all you need is a bit of sunshine to brighten your day.
