The end is in sight for The Villages Philharmonic Orchestra's 88 Keys Project. For years, the VPO has rented a concert piano from the Steinway Piano Gallery in Tampa whenever the orchestra hosted a guest pianist. Now, thanks to the generous contributions of donors, the VPO will soon purchase its own Steinway piano.

Day-Break Club Seeks Extra Help for Guests

The Day-Break Club of The Villages is looking for a few good men.

Although the club always welcomes new volunteers, right now it is in need of more men for the position. Whether it's every week or once a month, volunteers play a vital role in all aspects of the club.

"Volunteers do a little bit of everything," said club president Sandra Ricciardi, of the Village De La Vista. "Some of their main responsibilities are to oversee clients' safety and help entertain them."

Founded in 2013, the group offers a safe and supportive environment for caregivers living in The Villages to drop off adult family members with disabilities, such as Alzheimer's or Down syndrome. Activities vary between the group's weekly

Tri-County Women Veterans Celebrates 25-Year Anniversary

By MADDIE CUTLER | Daily Sun Senior Writer

Members of the Tri-County Women Veterans marked the group's 25th anniversary with a cruise in December, but they also took moments throughout the past year to look back at their more than two decades of friendship and remember all they've accomplished together.

President Betsy Nolan

retired from the U.S. Navy as a captain after serving for 26 years. She joined the Tri-County Women Veterans around 2015 and has enjoyed watching the club evolve.

"I am thrilled to be a part of this organization," said Nolan, of the Village of Bonita.

ORCHESTRA

During the first classical concert of the year, which featured Italian guest pianist Renato Balsadonna, it was announced that the orchestra recently passed a crucial milestone in its ongoing fundraising campaign.

“Your Villages Philharmonic Orchestra, under the leadership of maestro Pasquale Valerio, is on the cusp of raising the necessary funds to acquire a beautiful, brand-new concert D model grand piano, just like the one you see here today,” said Jonathan Hunt, the Steinway Tampa Bay vice president. “The fundraising goal is in sight, but we still need your help. We ask that you please consider joining our campaign.”

The 88 Keys Project was created in partnership with Steinway & Sons, one of the foremost piano manufacturers in the world. It started in November 2022, when Valerio brought in two Steinway artists to play in the lobby of The Sharon L. Morse Performing Arts Center. He repeated the experience two more times, but, until this summer, nothing happened.

way through October, when Dean Throndsen, a longtime VPO supporter, announced the status of the campaign and urged patrons to donate. Many contributed, but donations ultimately fell short of the total goal. That changed three months ago, when Valerio started shopping for a good deal on a Steinway and looking for donors in earnest.

"I drove to South Florida, and I met a donor who understood my frustration," said Valerio, music director of the VPO. "He said, 'If you find someone who can match my $25,000, you will have my check.'"

Valerio ended up finding not only one person to match the $25,000 but two. With an extra $75,000 to boost the existing donations, he turned back to the VPO's audience. He allowed donors like Thronsdon to address the audience before concerts, encouraging them to come together and support the cause.

In December, Throndsen once again urged patrons to donate to the 88 Keys Project. After the concert, he looked over the balcony down into the lobby, where he saw lines of people waiting to write a check and make a donation. He is humbled by the number of people who gave to the VPO.

"I had a man who told me his father donated a Steinway organ to the church in central Minnesota some 50 years ago, and it's still being used today," Throndsen said. "He said, 'I wrote a check because you are not buying a piano, you are buying an exceptional musical instrument that will last The Villages Philharmonic Orchestra for years.”

At the classical concert, Balsadonna demonstrated the quality of the piano with a performance of Mozart's "Piano Concerto No. 20 in D minor, K. 466" as well as two additional pieces.

The 88 Keys Project has since reached $130,000, and Valerio expects more donations to come soon.

This month, he will travel to the famous and historical Steinway & Sons piano factory in New York City and select the VPO's piano.

Technically, the VPO doesn't need a permanent concert piano because the orchestra only does three piano concerts every year. But for Valerio, it's not about necessity — it's about investing in the community's future.

"We can rent, but in my vision for the future of the community, we should have a piano that belongs to The Villages Philharmonic Orchestra but is in service of the community," he said. "We already agreed with everybody that we take only the best they have offer to us."

meetings, but typically meetings include games, live entertainment and trivia. The primary goal is to give caretakers a break during the day, which is where the club's name comes from. People who use the service are known as "Day Breakers." Volunteers assist the leadership team in running weekly meetings and making sure clients are safe and having fun.

While clients are evenly split between men and women, the majority of the current volunteers are women.

"We have some spots to fill after losing a few of our male volunteers," Ricciardi said. "Male volunteers help the men in the club feel more at ease and give them someone to relate with."

People can choose how frequently they volunteer. Many of them go to club meetings every week, though some opt to go biweekly or monthly. A typical day starts before the meeting officially begins and ends after the clients have gone home.

All volunteers have different responsibilities that change from week to week, but could include helping clients sign in, assisting with activities or serving snacks and drinks. Another goal is to make sure clients are having fun and participating, whether it means dancing to groovy tunes or playing horse bingo with them.

"A major part of volunteering is keeping clients happy," said volunteer Steve Robbins, of the Village of Duval. "We have a lot of fun with it."

As safety is a priority for the Day-Break Club, volunteers follow specific measures to keep clients safe throughout the meeting, such as preventing clients from wandering out of the room.

To help prevent this, some volunteers may be assigned to monitor the doors or accompany guests to restrooms.

"Volunteers will get training on how to redirect people and keep them from wandering," Ricciardi said.

Another significant part of volunteering is building relationships with clients through one-on-one interactions.

Gerard Desilets, of the Village of Ashland, has volunteered with the club since 2016. He said one of the many perks is the friendships he's formed with some of the clients.

"There are three reasons I volunteer — for caretakers, for clients and for myself," he said. "It's rewarding to know how much you're helping others as a volunteer."

It's also important to be mindful of clients' disabilities and know how to accommodate them. Potential volunteers should be compassionate, patient and go out of their way to make clients feel welcome, Ricciardi said.

"You should enjoy people and be willing to socialize with clients," Desilets said. "You get to know them on a more personal level."

Volunteers must be Villages residents and have a valid ID card. Those who are interested can call Ricciardi at 203-376-2820. New volunteers can expect an orientation and some training before they officially start their roles.

The Day-Break Club meets at 1 p.m. Tuesdays at Odell Recreation. Visit day-break-club.com or call Ricciardi for more information.
